Kronos Workforce Ready User Interface Refresh Initiative

September 25, 2015

All,

Kronos has recently announced plans for a WorkForce Ready (WFR) User Interface initiative to improve usability of the product. They're updating the visual design and streamlining navigation of the product. The Phase 1 enhancements are scheduled to be released in November of this year.

What does this mean? It means that the look and feel of the menus and navigation in Kronos WFR will be different. The functionality remains unchanged, but the improvements should make it easier to move around in the product.

If you’re interested in what some of these changes will look like, a document that illustrates some of the key changes has been uploaded to Kronos for your review. You can find it by navigating to Our Company | Documents. It's called WFR User Interface Refresh.

At this point we don't have any information about when we'll have access to a system with the new User Interface for us to test, update documentation, and to provide you more specifics about the changes, but we'll keep you updated as we learn more.

Thank you again for your participation in the Kronos Project!
